

Your world is where you point it.

"Look, my week is lousy. The pressures are unreal. Come Friday I'm all knotted up from the week. I climb in that van Friday night and it's still bad. But come Sunday, well that's different . . . I'm like . . . well . . . laid back, y'know . . ."

Chrysler's Drifter. It's like not having a care in the world. Not doing a thing you don't want to do. No phones. No effort. No hassles.

Look at it.

Big, bold stripes sitting pretty on chunky 6" radial-shod road wheels coloured to match.

Clunk the big door shut.

You're in your own, very personal world. Deep pile carpet says good things to your toes as you ease back in the reclining bucket seat.

There's no hurry now. Set up the side mirrors. Relax into your driving position.

The world can wait.

Now wrap your hands around that fat padded sports wheel. Blip the loud pedal. The cabin fills with good sound. Clutch in, take first gear. You're ready to roll your own.

So go now. Go in your Drifter. Your world is where you point it.

If you're into carrying more than a close friend, the Drifter ute has distinct possibilities.

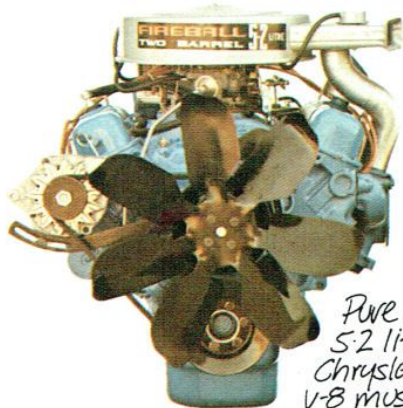

Look down the tube. Wall to wall carpeting. Upholstered from the carpet up the side walls and right over the top, front to back. Handy place to crash.
